What's New in the Adobe Photoshop 2021 (Version 22.3)?

Today is a day to celebrate American Independence. If you are a constitutionalist who believes in the basics of our republic, there are six things you absolutely must know, and today is the day to show it. 1. The Declaration of Independence was signed on July 4, 1776. The Declaration was adopted by the Second Continental Congress on July 4, 1776, and it consisted of a preamble and three main parts: the “general” principles of the United States, the “declaration” explaining those principles, and “the reasons and justifications for” the principle of independence. 2. The Declaration of Independence was not a formal, legal document. It was not ratified by a vote of the states (a formality the Framers of the Constitution sought to avoid), and it was not signed by a quorum of Congress. 3. The Declaration of Independence is not a bill, a treaty, or an order; it’s a resolution, adopted by the Continental Congress on July 4, 1776. It’s a resolution, not a law or proclamation. The passage of a resolution is only one small step away from a simple announcement; many have passed resolutions prior to the adoption of the Declaration. 4. Thomas Jefferson and John Adams were not the authors of the Declaration of Independence. The Declaration of Independence has a preamble, the Declaration, and the Reasons and Justifications. The preamble acknowledges the author of the Declaration (“We, therefore, the Representatives of the united States of America, in General Congress, Assembled,...”); the Declaration itself is signed by each member of the Second Continental Congress; and the Reasons and Justifications are those of the delegates. Thomas Jefferson and John Adams were members of the Continental Congress, but they were not the authors of the Declaration. 5. James Madison did not write the “general” principles part of the Declaration. Madison was the author of the Declaration’s first four sections, but he did not write the “general” principles. He probably composed those sections as his ideas, but he did not adopt the ideas into a single document. The “general” principles do not have an author. 6. Thomas Jefferson did not write the “declaration” part of the Declaration. Most people assume that Jefferson wrote it; he did not write
